FilmSnobbery founder and host Nic LaRue sits down in the Filmmaker Lounge at the 2019 Oxford Film Festival with the writer/director of HOW I CAME OUT, Mark Jones to chat about his new film shot over two days in Memphis, TN. They chat about the differences in shooting short films versus features films (in regards to concise storytelling and managing smaller budgets), creating short films while being mindful of ideal lengths for film festivals, and working with a lot of the same cast and crew on various projects.
